New global government & public services leader appointed by PwC

Rollie Quinn re-joins PwC from EY where he served as managing partner of the US public sector practice

PwC today announced that Rollie Quinn was appointed as global government and public services leader.

Mr. Quinn re-joins PwC from EY, where he served as the managing partner for their US public sector practice.

He has worked extensively around the world on public sector programmes involving defense and security, diplomacy and international development, with organisations such as the US Department of Defense, United States Agency for International Development (USAID), US Department of State and the US Department of Justice.

A former US Army officer and a graduate of the US Military Academy at West Point, Rollie started his career in consulting after joining Raytheon Corporation as an engineer on missile defense programmes working with the US Department of Defense.

Robert Swaak, Vice Chairman Global Clients & Markets, PwC said: “I welcome Rollie back to the firm, and am fully confident that with his passion coupled with his extensive experience and expert insight, the business will reach greater heights.”

Commenting on his new appointment, Rollie Quinn said: “For over 165 years, PwC has built trust in the critical systems that have enabled governments, business and societies to function and work to solve their most important problems. I am excited to be back at PwC and am very much looking forward to working with our global public sector leadership.”
