Case IH proudly represented American farmers at the White House, bringing an enduring symbol of the industry's strength and legacy to the nation's capital.

Displayed on the South Lawn during a presidential "Celebration of Agriculture" event, the Case IH Heartland Magnum™ tractor stood as a tribute to the farmers who power American agriculture and to the generations of manufacturing expertise rooted in Racine, Wisconsin.

For almost four decades, the Case IH Magnum tractor has been one of the most iconic machines in modern agriculture, proudly built in the United States and trusted by farmers around the world to deliver productivity and performance season after season.

The Heartland Magnum featured at the White House reflects that legacy. Featuring a patriotic red, white and blue design, the one-of-a-kind tractor underscores agriculture's connection to America's identity and Case IH's fundamental role in forging modern agriculture. The brand traces its roots back to 1842 when the company first began building equipment for US farmers, and over 180 years later, it represents generations of American manufacturing expertise that stand behind farmers in the field today.

"Being part of this celebration of agriculture is a proud moment for our team and for the farmers we serve," said Scott Harris, President, North America, CNH. "Built in Racine since 1988, the Magnum tractor reflects the strength of American manufacturing and the performance farmers depend on every day. We are committed to supporting US agriculture with world-class equipment."
